but the Modstock has a provision for Uncle Mike's quick detachable sling swivels, one of which is provided in the Modstock modification kit. The Uncle Mike's sling swivel can be fitted to either side of the stock. Needless to say, the Modstock has been adopted by several special operations units.

From an interoperability standpoint, almost all AR-15 type parts including springs and fire control components fit the P308, save for the front hinge pin that is 0.25 of an inch longer than that of a smaller caliber AR. Thus, those organizations changing over from 5.56mm ARs to the P308 will have minimal logistics issues. Naturally, components like bolts and bolt carriers from 5.56mm ARs do not fit the P308. Magazines are identical to those manufactured by DPMS for their family of .308 AR rifles and are relatively inexpensive and reliable. Almost all manufacturers of .308 caliber AR-type rifles now use this magazine, so it should be fairly easy to find. About all that is necessary to complete the P308 as a tactical carbine suitable for just about any situation are an optic and night vision, so the rifle is capable of true 24/7 operations in keeping with today's military and law enforcement tactics.

SHOOTING IMPRESSIONS

Shooting the P308 was a true revelation. We have never shot a gas piston carbine that delivered the level of accuracy of the P308. Right from the box, our test P308 shot sub-minute of angle groups. The P308's accuracy was on a par with the best bolt operated precision tactical rifles and was like nothing in our experience. We had been told by POF that the rifle was sub minute of angle accurate, but the accuracy we experienced was extraordinary.

We noted above that the old .308 (7.62mm NATO) round has become a favorite in the "sandbox" based on reports we have seen. Now there is a .308 caliber carbine that delivers everything a rifleman could want — amazing accuracy, reliability and lethality, all in a compact lightweight package. If we could sum up our impression of POF-USA's P308 carbine, we'd say first that the company's motto "Relentless Reliability" doesn't go far enough — as true as that is, we'd also add "Amazing Accuracy." If this isn't the best .308 on the planet, it comes damn close!

ULTIMATE GUN TOOL

By Paul Markel

Back in the old days, as folks are fond of saying, you could get away with having a flathead or Philips screwdriver in your field kit and little more. Those days are gone forever. Today, firearms manufacturers are using all manner of screws and fastening devices on their guns. Hex and Torx screws are now as common, or more so, as the standard slot and Philips variety.

How many times have you packed all your gear out to the range only to discover that you don't have the right wrench or screw driver to tighten the scope rings or mount on your rifle? I will admit that has happened to me on more than one occasion.

When I heard about the Avid Gun Tool I thought it might be worth a look. It's advertised as having 18 separate tools all in one compact package. The price also seemed well within reason.

Avid Gun Tool

First of all, the Avid Gun Tool is not much bigger than a full sized Buck 110 knife. That is a definite plus. It will fit in a jacket pocket or side pouch easily. Getting down to brass tacks, the Gun Tool includes five built-in Hex (Allen) and Torx wrenches (Allen 3/32 of an inch and 5/32 of an inch, Torx T10, T15 and T20) of the most common sizes.

There is a 3/16 of an inch inch bit socket located on one end of the tool. A storage compartment in the backside of the tool holds four bits; two flathead and two Philips. Obviously, you can swap out unique bits of your own.

A multi-gauge choke wrench will attract the shotgun crowd. The wrench will tighten/loosen all shotgun tubes from 10 gauge down to .410 bore. There is also a multi-purpose pin punch.

No multi-tool would be complete without a blade of some sort. The knife on the Avid tool is a clawpoint design. This blade should make short work of rope or twine and would seem at home cutting open boxes of rimfire ammunition.

All in all, the Avid Gun Tool would seem to be an invaluable tool for either the shooting bench or the field. As I put pen to paper the cost is less than $30. From my perspective it's certainly worth the money. Get your hands on one by calling 800-401-4670 or visiting theguntool.com
